Back to the Future: Works From the Backroom

In October 1987, we opened the doors to our first gallery in Manhattan. Until four weeks ago, unlocking a gallery door had been an almost daily ritual for 33 years. And although it has been only a few weeks, we are feeling nostalgic for the energy of a gallery opening and for the pure pleasure of connecting with others around a mutual love.

As we are hunkered down, we've had the time to go through inventory—our racks and backrooms. This catalogue represent works acquired through the years that we are making available for sale during this time.

Art will endure, though we are concerned about the ability of artists, museums and galleries to withstand the fallout from this unfortunate event. We hope to be opening our doors once more in the not too distant future.

J. Cacciola Gallery, Chelsea 2014

In the meantime...

...from now until we open our doors to the public again, we are making this inventory available. In this catalogue, the prices listed reflect the current market value of the works. However, if you are interested in a work, we will consider an offer. Simply click on the image of interest to sent us an email.

Thank you for your patronage. We hope to see you soon.

Si nomás pudiera ir y venir
sin tanto dolor
¡Que simple sería la vida!
Esta vida que siempre
carga sus sombras
Unas sombras tan negras

Preséntame una paloma blanca
la palomita que canta con alegría Necesito oírla
sentirla
y vivir con ella
